To Whom It May Concern,

I have had the pleasure of working with Chris Jordan over the past decade; he currently works as part of our team on a cooperative agreement with the National Park Service (NPS).

Chris began working for me in 2006, when we both worked for the National Center for Bicycling & Walking (NCBW). He was the NCBW's first full-time webmaster. He completely redesigned both of the organization's web sites. He added a variety of interactive elements to the web sites. He was very fast and efficient, and worked very well with other members of the staff.

For the past six years, Chris has worked for me delivering various web-based functions as part of the Surface Transportation Policy Project's support for the NPS Transportation Program. He made significant contributions to the design and development of the current web site (www.nps.gov/transportation), and to the ongoing update and enhancement of the site.

If there is one trait that stands out when I think of working with Chris it is his speed. I can typically count on a 24-hour turnaround on tasks assigned to him. And, for large projects, I know that he will deliver before I expect it. This is the kind of support that makes working with Chris a real pleasure.

Chris is attentive to detail and is always looking for ways to enhance the sites we support. When we needed to update dozens of online documents to interact with a new search engine we were installing, Chris jumped in, learned the software, and had the task wrapped up in a matter of days.

For whatever type of work Chris decides to pursue, he brings valuable personal traits to the task. He has a great work ethic, a strong desire to do his very best, and a real passion for the success of the overall effort.

Sincerely,

Bill Wilkinson
Executive Director
